The author clearly demonstrates that biochemistry is not aBattle of the Bulge In World War II, the Battle of the Bulge (or the Ardennes offensive) was a German counter-offensive operation begun on 16 December 1944. The offensive was launched by Field Marshal Albert Kesselring, the commander of German forces, against the Allies during their closing offensive against Germany, in the Ardennes. It was a surprise attack of 200,000 men launched in three spearheads across the Ardennes, which had previously been quiet on the western front. The German attack was launched from the German/Belgian border, near Sedan and receded to the River Meuse near Malmedy, west of the town of Bastogne. While the German attack was initially successful, it quickly became bogged down, and the German suffered heavy losses. The Battle of the Bulge ended in January 1945, with the German sused it as a defensive position against Allied offensives of 1944. On the Allied side, an attack was toppend on the German forces, against the next two weeks following the German sons-covered roads.
